

OF INTEREST TO WOMEN

WHEN CUPID PERCHED.

BY RUBY DOUGLAS.

Miss Georgina was wondering if the young man was properly impressed by the sight. The young man was speculating as to whether she was highly entertained by the valuable information he had just received. Finally a negative answer to his soliloquy came to him intuitively.

"You know this park is right in the center of the island," he said.

"Yes," Georgina was politely interrupted.

"It seems truly wonderful to think of all this greenness—it's green in summer, you know," laughed the man, noting his own brilliant statement. "In the heart of so great a city as New York."

Georgina smiled enlightenment.

"Oh, do you live here?" she asked, appearing her confidence with the belief that sight-seeing gave certain privileges among fellow tourists. It was for their mutual education that they were conversing.

"No—Pittsburg—but I've been here often before. My sister went to school back there on Fifth avenue at Mrs. Finish's."

"Oh, not so did it?" Georgina asked. She had been about to ask him the name of his sister and that—well, that was equivalent to asking for his own name. Even a mutual sight-seeing expedition would not excuse that.

The man observed her hesitation and misinterpreted her meaning. Perhaps she did not want to know his name, he thought. "You might have known Bess," he said tactfully. "Without directly asking her, he had thrown out a lead which she could follow if she chose."

"Bess Burruss?" asked Georgina, unable to suppress her delight at having found the brother of the girl whose address she had been wanting for days.

"The same," replied the man.

"Oh, I know who she is," Georgina said in low tones, and she would not promise to write to him, believing he was a man who would not be so easily won.

"Ah—ha! I believe my sister had some-thing to do with your coming here," he said, looking at her with a mischievous smile. "Now, how was he going to find out her name? Perhaps his sister had spoken of her—but I am sure he would have felt a thrill had she done so? Surely he would have felt the proximity of his fate, and he would surely have been looking for her. How jolly looking he was for three hours to him before taking his train for Pittsburg. He had happened along by the Flatiron building just in time for the sight-seeing coach to suggest itself as a time-killer.

"You had forgotten all about the man with the megaphone."

WAR BEGINS ROMANCE.

Her's Chum Marries Girl That Former's Death Left Single.

ATOTAGA SPRINGS, Dec. 11.—Coming a romance that began after William's death in consequence of his being killed by the Rough Riders last year, Miss Maud Livingston last day was married to Henry Worthington, also of New York, in Bethesda Springs, Md. The wedding was a very quiet affair, only close relatives of the young persons were present. Miss Livingston having been compelled to abandon her plans for a big wedding because of the death of her father, she had been married in the Rough Riders and fought the Cuban war side by side. When she was in the Rough Riders, she was contracted in the Antilles, young man with him. Miss Livingston arrived in the Massachusetts capital, and before he died. She was married by Mr. Bull's devotion to his wife and when she met the surviving Mr. Bull the following season acquaintance became closer.

Every member of the Council of friendship, fell in love with the young woman and began a courtship that was not unshared, but was by the memories of his fondness for first adored.

REGGIE OUT OF SCANDAL.

Vanderbilt Saved From Disgrace by Canfield's Plea of Guilty.

NEWPORT, R. I., Dec. 11.—Reggie Vanderbilt's secretary said that his employer was highly pleased with the outcome of the Canfield case.

"What does Mrs. Reggie say?" he was asked.

"Oh, not much; only as a joke remarked, 'Reggie, you can afford to take a high-bail on the good news.'"

"Mr. Vanderbilt's mother and his sister Gladys, who have really been greatly annoyed by the scandal, will be more than pleased at the happy ending of the disagreeable affair. Mr. Vanderbilt did not care as much for himself, but his mother's worry bothered him some. I think Mr. Vanderbilt wants to go and come at his own free will, but he early determined not to appear as a witness, as he considered the disgrace of being a teacher worse than the gambling itself."

"How does he regard Canfield, anyway?"

"Mr. Vanderbilt realizes Canfield is in it for all that's coming, but as a gambler he seems to think Canfield not a bad fellow."

"Will Vanderbilt go to New York often?"

"I think so, now that he is immune from arrest. I know that he wants to go away, but not in disguise or incognito."

PASSER ON OCEANIC BRINGS DREAD DISEASE FROM AFRICA.

NEW YORK, Dec. 11.—A case of black water fever, the dreadful malarial disease of Africa, an attack of which is invariably fatal in that country, has been brought into port on the Oceanic. The presence of the fever on the ship was not known until today, when the patient, Shelby Neely, a cotton buyer from Mississippi, was removed, very ill, in an ambulance to St. Vincent's hospital.

Mr. Neely has been experimenting in cotton growing in Algeria. The malarial did not develop until the steamer was two days at sea. Dr. W. F. M. O'Loughlin, the Oceanic's physician, said Mr. Neely would recover in this climate.

MERELY TOOK AN UMBRELLA.

Man Fined for This Innocent Exercise of Inalienable Right.

CHICAGO, Dec. 11.—In Justice Caverly's court yesterday, unwritten rights were trampled under winter-weight heels and John A. Evans was fined $75 for following the sacred traditions of his forebears.

Standing speechless, miserable and aghast, the prisoner loomed in the musty court atmosphere as a human tombstone in a graveyard that has been in existence since time began. He was no vulgar criminal. No just for gold had sapped his soul and no hand of his had been raised against a fellow man.

He had stolen an umbrella!

A ninety-eight-cent umbrella.

A grayed-out Chicagoan.

An umbrella that was as miserable even as the prisoner at the dock.

When the case was called, Evans stepped jauntily before the magistrate.

"The charge?" inquired Justice Caverly in humorless tone.

"I stepped an umbrella, your honor; I saw him do it," explained Policeman Schmidt, who made the arrest.

"Guilty or not guilty?" queried the court, still in good voice.

"I—er—that is," responded Evans, his smile dying away as he noted the glint of the magistrate's eye. "I took the umbrella—just took it, you know—but I meant no harm."

"No harm?" thundered the court. "The man who steals an umbrella is the meanest of mortals. I—lost one last week myself. No harm? Your punishment will be $75 and costs!"

Still dazed, Evans was led away. "No harm," again ejaculated the court, the municipal neck expanding till it threatened violence to the collar that surrounded it.
